

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method for replicating a surface relief. In particular, the present invention relates to a method for replicating a surface relief in a non-metallic layer being held by a metal substrate. Furthermore, the present invention relates to an article for holding a surface relief. The article will typically form an integral part of a metal container, such as a food container.